Another pilot project collects data not only on traffic violations, but also, e.g. whether payments are done in a timely manner, whether garbage is deposited correctly or whether the people behave well on social media platforms: whether they pay their online purchases on time or whether they honor reservations (taxis, restaurants, etc.) they made online. All these items are summarized in a score. People with a good score would get certain benefits. For people with a bad score certain services would be cut, e.g. they could not book high-speed trains anymore. You could also see the score of other people and thus know how trustworthy they are. How do you evaluate/view this proposal? (q_10723196 - Typ 111)

In another pilot project, a local government cooperates with a large IT company, using data provided by the company to score its citizens. Behavior such as not honoring a taxi reservation made through an app or leaving an online review in bad faith to harm a competitor can lower a person's score.
