

PROVISIONAL COURSE INFORMATION SUMMER TERM 2023

The following list of classes are open to all incoming exchange students.

Please note that these classes are aimed at students of English or American Studies, i.e. Anglophone literatures, linguistics and cultures. The classes with code numbers 100/200 are introductory courses. All classes with code numbers above 300 and higher require some basic background knowledge.

Please check the level of English language competence before selecting classes to attend. Most of our classes are aimed at students of English who have reached C1 level of competence on the CEFR. We do not offer any classes suitable for students with language levels lower than B2.

Note that there are parallel groups of some classes offered in 'groups'. Students only need to attend one group of each class, which will meet once a week for 90 minutes.

Before you register for classes on the PORTA platform, you will need to check your class choices – either by submitting a Learning Agreement or by emailing Mrs Maas.

Students should use the online platform PORTA to register for classes if possible. Alternatively, contact the individual lecturers about registering for classes. Please include your full name, Trier University student number (if you have it), the name of the course as listed and the day and time of the group you wish to join.

The exact number of ECTS credits awarded for a seminar or lecture will depend on the workload and assessment. Students should negotiate with the lecturer at the start of the teaching term. For your Learning Agreement, simply list the number of ECTS you would like to aim for.

LANG 101 Integrated Language Study Skills

In this introductory class, the emphasis is on speaking and listening skills in an academic context, especially on giving oral presentations and making the most of a lecture course. The class equips students with the kinds of language, language awareness, and essential study skills they will need to successfully complete their English Studies degrees, and encourages them to develop learning strategies to improve their fluency and accuracy in English. The class also provides students with extensive speaking practice and aims to reduce their inhibitions about working in groups and speaking in front of their peers in presentations and discussions, in order to prepare students for future

CEFR Level: B2+ ECTS Credits: 4 or 5

LANG 302 Advanced Grammar

This course aims to help students accurately use and analyse the meanings of advanced English grammatical structures and to avoid German interference mistakes. The primary focus will be on verb usage, including tense/aspect, complementation, conditional sentences, reported speech, and active/passive voice. Other topics may include articles/determiners, participles, word order, or formal/colloquial language. Skills developed include grammatical accuracy, fluency of written production, familiarity with meta-language, and using reference works.

LANG 402 Translation German – English

This course introduces students to the basic principles of effective translation from German into English, whilst contrastively analysing important grammar points of these two languages. By the end of this course, students should have greater fluency and accuracy when writing in their L2 and be able to use appropriate terminology to describe linguistic situations and inter-linguistic relationships. Participants need at least B2+ level competence in both English and German.

CEFR Level: B2-C1 ECTS Credits: 2

Groups: Mon 12-14, Weds 10-12, Thurs 10-12, 12-14

LANG 601 Creative Writing

The main aim of this course is for students to regularly produce, reflect and improve their own writing and review and critique the work of others.

Objectives:

- to identify the motivation for writing creative texts;
- to analyse components of effective creative writing and use textual and linguistic strategies to communicate ideas and meaning to readers;
- to use clear and diverse language to create vivid pictures of character, setting, time and dialogue;
- to structure texts appropriately;
- to review and edit texts based on feedback;
- to produce accurate language at an advanced level.

Please note that whilst you will write on your own, you become part of a Reading Circle and work on some activities together, especially sharing ideas and giving initial feedback on each other's texts.

LANG 601 Creative Writing – Speculative Fiction

In this course, we will focus on how science fiction and fantasy are written, the diversity of techniques, styles and language used, and what makes for good texts. Throughout the term, students will practice their own creative writing in these genres. Assessment will include two assessed pieces of work as well as a weekly writing journal. Students should be prepared not only to discuss the mechanics of writing but also to share and evaluate their writing in groups or with the class.

LANG 601 Discussion & Debate

This course aims to provide continued oral practice at a high level whilst integrating research and analytical skills. Topics for discussion and debate will be of a controversial nature and related to the English-speaking world. Primary topics will be narrowed down and selected by students. Students are expected to participate fully in each session as the course is highly dependent upon verbal interaction. This course will include and focus on: pair/small-group work, debate, discussion, academic research, analytical and deductive reasoning, persuasive language, appropriate register.

LIT 201V Introduction to Literary Studies 2: A History of English Literature

This lecture offers a first dive into the history of English literature. Introducing texts, authors, and historical contexts from the pre-modern to the postmodern period, it is designed as a broad overview that presents students with an initial orientation of the relevant literary currents and landmark works. In particular, it will focus on the interrelation of historical, cultural, and literary developments. Students should be prepared to study an extensive amount of texts. Extracts of the texts discussed will be made available online via the StudIP platform. For preparatory reading I recommend Paul Poplawski's English Literature in Context (Cambridge: Cambridge UP, 2008). Many of the texts discussed can be found in the two-volume The Norton Anthology of English Literature by M. H. Abrams et al. (New York: Norton, 1993).

LIT 402V Basic Survey of Canadian Literature and Culture (Lecture)

Proceeding more or less chronologically, this lecture course will chart the major steps of the history of Canada and its various manifestations on cultural as well as literary terrains, across the relevant genres, and often in relation to the big neighbour, the United States. What will emerge is a portrait of settlement and expansion, of religious and economic ideologies, of multiple ethnicities, all making up a media-rich, multicultural mosaic called Canada.

LIT 601V Approaches to Modern British Literature and Postcolonial Echoes (Lecture)

With a stress on the 20th Century, this final-year lecture course touches on central literary (and thus: cultural-historical-social-political) trends and developments. Connecting with the antecedent Victorian period, some of the major continuations, adaptations, and (radical) transformations in and of (Modern) British Literature will be reflected. While priority is given to the genre of the novel, we will trace how major changes and events have effected particular repercussions across all sections of life: The swelling and decline of the Empire; two World Wars and Modernism; the Post-War reorientation; state intervention; and more redefinitions in terms of society, culture, and ethnicity; the politics of gender as well as postcolonial issues. Time and life permitting, we will end on this side of the Millennium.
